One side is printed with a portrait of George Washington, captioned "HIS EXCELLENCY/ GENERAL"

WASHINGTON/ Commander in Chief of the Forces of the United States of America." The Liverpool engraver framed Washington in exactly the same way he framed his British enemy Admiral Rodney on another punchbowl also included in this exhibit. This style of framing was designed by Thomas Billinge about 1760, and was by now old-fashioned. The Liverpool decorators printed punchbowls for both sides in the Revolutionary War so that each could drink the health of their hero.

Description:

Creamware punchbowl, probably made in Staffordshire and printed in black in Liverpool. The interior is lightly overpainted in colors. The ship displays the flag of the United States of America. The four trophies around it represent fighting, exploration, sailing and fishing. Drinkers probably encouraged each other to stop the ship from 'running aground' by keeping the bowl full of punch for another drink. Punchbowls are sometimes expand [+]
