Seen here is the complete Hawkins portable water closet which consisted of a mahogany cabinet with hinged lid that opened to reveal a hinged wooden seat with a circular opening, over a ceramic bowl, in this case printed in the Grapevine Border Series pattern shown above. The bowl with hinged bottom was mounted to a tin collar, which was designed to fit into a removable slop bucket. A copper lined cistern cabinet was attached to the left side of the cabinet. Also positioned on the left side was a brass pull, a brass pump mechanism, and a small hinged opening for pouring in water. Steven Hawkins applied for a patent for his design in 1821 for which he received a royal letters patent in 1822. Water was forced from the cistern through a short pipe into the bowl and the weight of the water forced contents down into the bucket. The bucket would have been removed as needed to empty the contents.
